Businesses have to gain more ethical and social responsibilities to their behaviour. A Cadbury Schweppes – Business Case Studies[1] presents some examples of the positive impact that ethical behaviour and corporate social responsibility has on a business: Attracts customers to the firm’s products, thereby boosting sales and profits. Makes employees want to stay with the business, reducing labour turnover and therefore increase productivity. Increases the number of employees wanting to work for the business, reducing recruitment costs and enabling the company to obtain the most talented employees. Attracts investors and keeps the company’s share price high, thereby protecting t To sum up, Business ethics and social responsibility are two concepts in the business environment. Business ethics are the moral principles a company uses to ensure all employees act in an acceptable manner when completing business functions. Social responsibility is typically an ideological theory that governments and the general public hold. Reason for picking the question: I was confused about business ethics and corporate social responsibility. I really want to know what's the difference between business ethics and CSR, and how companies take actions for business ethics and
Moreover I want to know what the main context of business ethics and CSR and how to distinguish two concepts.
